Second Language Writing
This series draws on the best available research, theory, and educational practice to help clarify issues and resolve problems in language teaching, language teacher education, and related areas. Books in the series focus on a wide range of issues and are written in a style that is accessible to classroom teachers, teachers-in-training, and teacher educators.

In this series:

Agendas for Second Language Literacy by Sandra Lee McKay

Reflective Teaching in Second Language Classrooms by Jack C. Richards and Charles Lockhart

Educating Second Language Children: The Whole Child, the Whole Curriculum, the Whole Community edited by Fred Genesee

Understanding Communication in Second Language Classrooms by Karen E. Johnson

The Self-Directed Teacher: Managing the Learning Process by David Nunan and Clarice Lamb

Functional English Grammar: An Introduction for Second Language Teachers by Graham Lock

Teachers as Course Developers edited by Kathleen Graves

Classroom-Based Evaluation in Second Language Education by Fred Genesee and John A. Upshur

From Reader to Reading Teacher: Issues and Strategies for Second Language Classrooms by Jo Ann Aebersold and Mary Lee Field

Extensive Reading in the Second Language Classroom by Richard R. Day and Julian Bamford

Language Teaching Awareness: A Guide to Exploring Beliefs and Practices by Jerry G. Gebhard and Robert Oprandy

Vocabulary in Second Language Teaching by Norbert Schmitt

Curriculum Development in Language Teaching by Jack C. Richards

Teachers’ Narrative Inquiry as Professional Development by Karen E. Johnson and Paula R. Golombek
Second Language Writing

Ken Hyland
City University of Hong Kong
Contents

Series Editor’s Preface
Preface
Acknowledgments

1 Writing and teaching writing
   Guiding concepts in L2 writing teaching
   Focus on language structures
   Focus on text functions
   Focus on creative expression
   Focus on the writing process
   Focus on content
   Focus on genre
   Toward a synthesis: Process, purpose, and context
   Summary and conclusion
   Discussion questions and activities

2 Second language writers
   Potential L1 and L2 writer differences
   Cultural schemata and writing
   Expectations about teaching and learning
   Teaching and learning styles
   Cultural differences in written texts
   Summary and conclusion
   Discussion questions and activities
   Appendix 2.1 Perceptual learning style preference questionnaire

3 Syllabus design and lesson planning
   Elements of a writing syllabus
   Analyzing student needs

© Cambridge University Press
www.cambridge.org
viii  Contents

Analyzing the learning context  64
Setting course goals and objectives  67
Developing the syllabus  70
Sample approaches to syllabus organization  73
Planning units of work  76
Planning lessons  79
Summary and conclusion  81
Discussion questions and activities  82
Appendix 3.1 Lesson plan for a writing class  84

4  Texts and materials in the writing class  85
The roles of materials in the writing class  86
Materials and authenticity  92
Selecting and assessing textbooks  95
Modifying writing textbooks  98
Designing materials for the writing class  100
Selecting and locating texts  104
Finding and selecting language and practice materials  107
Summary and conclusion  109
Discussion questions and activities  110

5  Tasks in the L2 writing class  112
Types of writing tasks  113
Task components  116
Graphological tasks  120
Language scaffolding  122
Language scaffolding tasks  124
Composing tasks  130
Sequencing writing tasks: The teaching-writing cycle  136
Summary and conclusion  139
Discussion questions and activities  141

6  New technologies in writing instruction  143
Computers, writing, and language learning  144
Word processing and writing teaching  146
Online writing  150
Internet resources for writing  158
CALL resources for writing  162
Corpora and concordancing  167
Summary and conclusion  172
Contents ix

Discussion questions and activities 172
Appendix 6.1 Some useful websites for writing teachers 174

7 Responding to student writing 177

Teacher written feedback 178
Teacher-student conferencing 192
Peer feedback 198
Summary and conclusion 207
Discussion questions and activities 208
Appendix 7.1 A rubric for the first draft of a university expository essay assignment 210
Appendix 7.2 A peer response sheet 211

8 Assessing student writing 212

Purposes of assessment 213
Validity and reliability issues 215
Designing assessment tasks 220
Approaches to scoring 226
Reducing assessment anxiety 232
Portfolio assessments 233
Summary and conclusion 239
Discussion questions and activities 240
Appendix 8.1 Holistic marking scheme 241
Appendix 8.2 An analytic scoring rubric 243

9 Researching writing and writers 245

Some preliminaries and key steps 246
Generating research: Formulating and focusing a question 247
Designing research 249
Collecting data 252
Analyzing writing data 264
Reporting research 270
Summary and conclusion 272
Discussion questions and activities 272
Appendix 9.1 Some topics and issues in writing research 275

References 277
Index 295
PERMISSIONS ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The publishers and I are grateful to authors, publishers, and software developers who have given permission to reproduce copyright material.

(pp. 90–115). Reprinted with the permission of Cambridge University Press.

Diagram on page 138 reprinted from Text-Based syllabus design by Susan Feez, (1998), p28, based on a concept by Callaghan and Rothery with permission from the National Centre for English Language Teaching and Research, Australia. © Macquarie University.

Screenshot on page 149 of Respond from the Daedalus Writing Suite. Reproduced with the permission of The Daedalus Group Inc.

Screenshot on page 155 of an on-line conversation in ICQ. Reproduced with the permission of ICQ Inc.

Screenshot on page 156 of the Entrance to Tapped In. Reproduced with the permission of Tapped In and SRI International Ltd.

Screenshot on page 161, from the Purdue University On-Line Writing Lab (OWL). Reproduced with the permission of Purdue Research Foundation.

Screenshots on pages 163, 164, 165, and 166 from Mindgame, Click into English, Report Writer, and Tense Buster. Reproduced with the permission of Andrew Stokes and Clarity Software.

Figure on page 234 from Johns, A. M. (1997). Text, role and context: developing academic literacies. Page 140–1. Reprinted with the permission of Cambridge University Press.
Learning how to write in a second language is one of the most challenging aspects of second language learning. Perhaps this is not surprising in view of the fact that even for those who speak English as a first language, the ability to write effectively is something that requires extensive and specialized instruction and which has consequently spawned a vast freshman composition industry in American colleges and universities. Within the field of second and foreign language teaching, the teaching of writing has come to assume a much more central position than it occupied twenty or thirty years ago. This is perhaps the result of two factors.

On the one hand, command of good writing skills is increasingly seen as vital to equip learners for success in the twenty-first century. The ability to communicate ideas and information effectively through the global digital network is crucially dependent on good writing skills. Writing has been identified as one of the essential process skills in a world that is more than ever driven by text and numerical data. A further strengthening of the status of writing within applied linguistics has come from the expanded knowledge base on the nature of written texts and writing processes that has been developed by scholars in such fields as composition studies, second language writing, genre theory, and contrastive rhetoric. As a result there is an active interest today in new theoretical approaches to the study of written texts as well as approaches to the teaching of second language writing that incorporate current theory and research findings.

This book is therefore quite timely. It provides a comprehensive and extremely readable overview of the field of second language writing, examining how theories of writing and the teaching of writing have evolved, the nature of good writing, the nature of texts and genres and how they reflect their use in particular discourse communities, the relationship between writing in the first and second language, how a curriculum can be developed for a writing course, the development of instructional materials for a writing class, the uses of the computer in writing instruction, and approaches to feedback and assessment. The book also examines approaches to research on second language writing and shows how teachers can investigate their students’ writing problems and explore their own practices in the teaching of writing.

The book reflects Professor Hyland’s dual role as a leading researcher in the field of second language writing and an experienced teacher of second language writing. Theory and research are hence used throughout to illuminate some of the pedagogical issues and decisions that are involved in teaching second language writing. The insights presented both through the text as well as through the tasks readers are invited to carry out will provide an invaluable source of ideas and principles to inform teachers’ and student teachers’ classroom decision making.
Preface

Writing is among the most important skills that second language students need to develop, and the ability to teach writing is central to the expertise of a well-trained language teacher. But while interest in second language writing and approaches to teaching it have increased dramatically over the last decade, teachers are often left to their own resources in the classroom as much of the relevant theory and research fails to reach them. This book addresses this problem by providing a synthesis of theory, research, and practice to help teachers of language become teachers of writing.

This book is written for practicing teachers and teachers in training who have little or no experience teaching writing to students from non–English-speaking backgrounds. More specifically, it attempts to meet the needs of those who are or will be teaching students who speak English as a second or foreign language in colleges, universities, workplaces, language institutes, and senior secondary schools. Those who teach children or teach basic literacy skills to adults will also find much of value. The book pulls together the theory and practice of teaching writing to present an accessible and practical introduction to the subject without assuming any prior theoretical knowledge or teaching experience.

This text is founded on the premise that an effective teacher is one who can make informed choices about the methods, materials, and procedures to use in the classroom based on a clear understanding of the current attitudes and practices in his or her profession. A strong teacher is a reflective teacher, and reflection requires the knowledge to relate classroom activities to relevant research and theory. The book’s practical approach toward second language writing attempts to provide a basis for this kind of reflection and understanding. In the text the reader will find a clear stance toward teaching writing which emphasizes the view that writing involves composing skills and knowledge about texts, contexts, and readers. It helps to develop the idea that writers need realistic strategies for drafting and revising, but they also must have a clear understanding of genre to structure their writing experiences according to the demands and constraints of particular contexts. I incorporate this emphasis on strategy, language, and context throughout the book.
The book also recognizes that teachers work in a range of situations – in schools, colleges, universities, corporate training divisions, and language institutes – and with students of different motivations, proficiencies, language backgrounds, and needs. They also work in contexts where English is taught as a Second Language (ESL) or as a Foreign Language (EFL), a distinction based on the language spoken by the community in which English is being studied. An ESL situation exists when the local community is largely English speaking, such as Australia, the United States, or the United Kingdom, while EFL contexts are those in which English is not the host language. Like most polarizations, however, this distinction obscures more complicated realities. For instance, ESL contexts can be further distinguished between learners who are migrants and who may therefore need occupational and survival writing skills, and those who plan to return to their own countries once they complete their courses. EFL contexts may include those where an indigenized variety has emerged (Singapore, India) or where colonization has afforded English a prominent role in local life (Hong Kong, Philippines), and those where English is rarely encountered (Korea, Japan).

These differences will have an impact on the kind of language students need and their motivation to acquire it, the cultural and linguistic homogeneity of the students, and the resources available to teachers. There are, however, sufficient similarities between these diverse types of context to focus on issues that concern all those who teach writing to non-native English speakers. In recognition of these similarities I shall use the acronym L2 as a generic form to refer to all users of English from non–English-speaking backgrounds and ESL as shorthand for all contexts in which such students are learning English. (Likewise, I use L1 to refer to those for whom English is their primary language.) The text also treats these students and contexts as similar by systematically setting out the key issues of classroom teaching in both contexts, addressing topics such as assessing needs, designing syllabuses, writing materials, developing tasks, using technology, giving feedback, and evaluating writing. In this way I hope to provide teachers with the resources to plan, implement, and evaluate a program of writing instruction for any teaching situation in which they may find themselves.

The book provides opportunities for you to engage with the ideas presented. Reflection tasks occur regularly through the chapters, encouraging readers to think about their own views on a topic and their potential needs as writing teachers. Each chapter concludes with a series of Discussion questions and activities which ask readers to consider ideas, examples of lesson plans, questionnaires, tasks or materials and so on, or to devise those of their own.
Acknowledgments

Textbooks cannot be written in a vacuum and I am grateful to the students, colleagues, and friends who have encouraged me, discussed ideas, and provided insights which have contributed to this book. I am particularly indebted to friends in Hong Kong, Australia, Britain, and the United States, especially Sue Hood, Chris Candlin, Malcolm Coulthard, John Swales, and Ann Johns, whose conversations and texts over many years have stimulated and sustained my long interest in writing, in both first and second languages.

I also want to acknowledge the ESL teachers studying the Master of Arts in English for Specific Purposes course at City University of Hong Kong for their feedback on many of the ideas and approaches discussed in these pages, and to my research assistant, Polly Tse, for her good humor and help in tracking down elusive items on the reference list. I am also grateful to Jack Richards, the series editor, who gave me the encouragement to write this book.

My thanks, as ever, go to Fiona Hyland, not only for allowing me to make use of her data, her valuable feedback on draft chapters, and her stimulating ideas on teaching writing, but for her constant support and encouragement.